A Swabian band that sounds like Sweden: The Rising Rocket

With their Swabian-hardworking mentality and due to the support of swedish producer Ronald Bood, „The Rising Rocket“ release their debut „Colours Of Stockholm“ (Headspin Records) on September 23rd. After successful participations in several bandcontests and two unsigned releases, Benni (voc/git), Simon (git/voc), Andy (bass/upright bass) and Philip (drums) can't wait to present their new baby.

The sound of „The Rising Rocket“ is reminiscent of famous bands from the UK and is influenced by bands such as „The Living End“, „Franz Ferdinand“ or „Mando Diao“. The four guys from Stuttgart offer a rousing, danceable mix of Indie, Soft-Punk und Rock'n'Roll, with catchy melodies and real earworms.

Already in summer 2009, during a short trip to Sweden, the band met Producer Ronald Bood („Mando Diao“, „Shout Out Louds“, „Sugerplum Fairy“) and a few german beers later they decided to record an album together. So Bood invited the band to his studio in Stockholm and in five weeks of intensive work they got the best out of the bands sound. The spectrum of the 13-track-album ranges from cheery sing-along songs to groovy drop D roadmovie-soundtracks and thrilling Rock'n'Roll tunes.

„The Rising Rocket“ played more than 150 shows on every size of stage in Germany and several other countries such as Italy, Switzerland, Austria and Sweden. In 2006 they participated in the Emergenza bandcontest successfully and they won the Coke Soundwave Discovery Tour in 2009. The most popular US-Pay-TV-Channel featured the band in their program „Project Myworld“, one of their songs was picked as the theme tune for a german TV-production and in winter one of their new album tracks will be appearing in the cinema film „Superhero“.
